INTRODUCTION

This Facilitator’s Guide was designed to complement Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships—a toolkit that provides a framework, tools, and resources to guide thoughtful conversations and decisions to establish successful partnerships.

It is designed as a step-by-step guide for facilitators who will deliver training workshops to introduce and encourage the use of the Partnering for Student Success toolkit by district staff, school leaders, partnership coordinators, teachers and school staff, and partner organizations engaged in school-based partnerships.

ABOUT PARTNERING FOR STUDENT SUCCESS

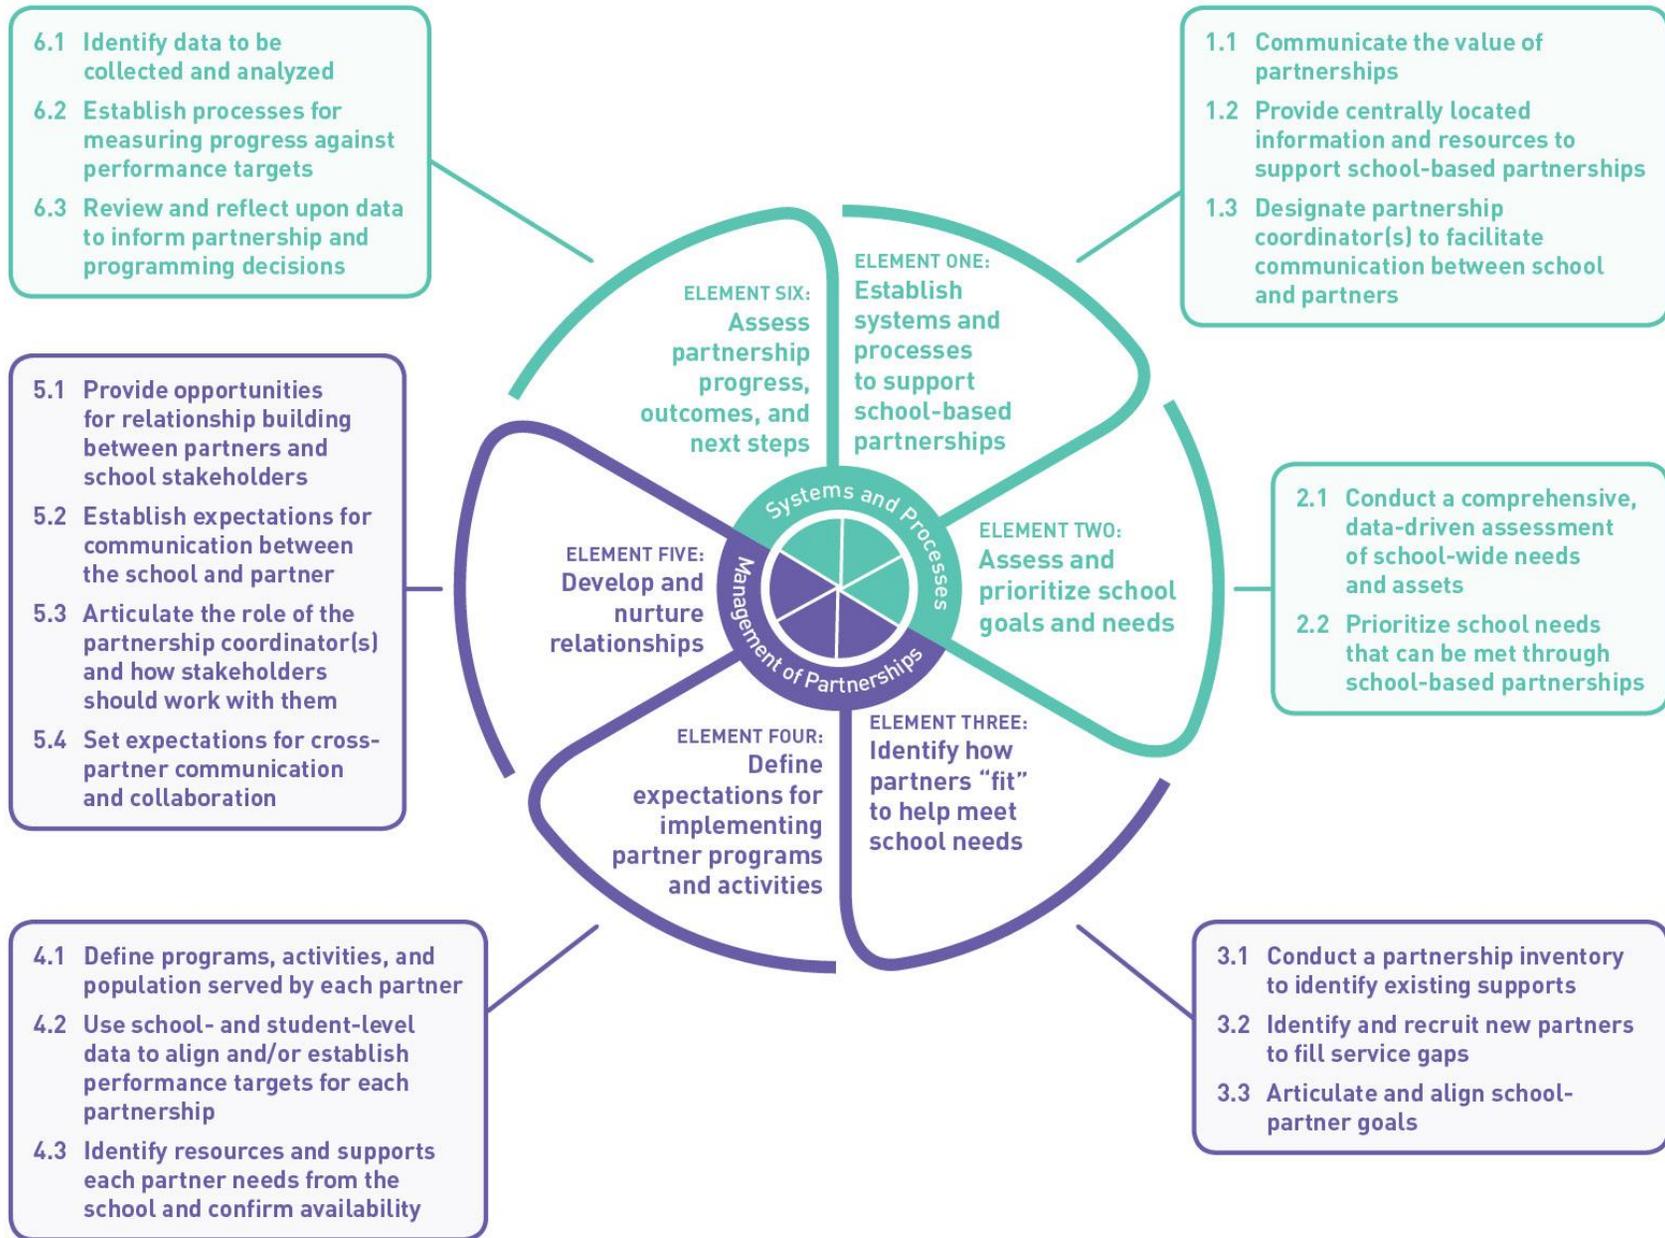

Regardless of partnership type, there are systems and processes that districts, schools, and partner organizations can adopt to establish, support, and manage partnerships in ways that maximize their impact on student success.

The toolkit is structured around six elements associated with developing and maintaining successful school-based partnerships:

1. Establish systems and processes to support school-based partnerships
2. Assess and prioritize school goals and needs
3. Identify how partners “fit” to help meet school needs
4. Define expectations for implementing partner programs and activities
5. Develop and nurture relationships
6. Assess partnership progress, outcomes, and next steps

Elements One, Two, and Six relate to systems and processes for partnership planning, whereas Elements Three, Four, and Five relate to management of partnerships. Exhibit 1 (reproduced from page 3 of Partnering for Student Success) provides an overview of these six elements of successful school-based partnerships.

Exhibit 1: Elements of School-Based Partnerships

UNDERSTANDING THIS FACILITATOR’S GUIDE

Following the organization of Partnering for Student Success, this Facilitator’s Guide is organized into training modules—one for each of the six elements discussed in depth, plus an Overview module that describes the school-based partnership framework and introduces all six elements in less detail.

Each module in this Facilitator’s Guide includes three sections:

- Module Overview offers an “at a glance” view of the purpose, length, and activities for the module. The “Module Overview” section provides a recommended amount of time for delivering the training module, but facilitators can modify or omit certain activities to align with the amount of time available for each training session.
- Suggested Facilitation Process provides a step-by-step overview of the materials, activities, and discussions of an individual training module. Facilitators can modify the facilitation process to meet the needs of their training participants.
- Slide Overview & Talking Points includes a table of the slides and notes pages from the module’s PowerPoint. The table includes a range of time recommended for each slide (and accompanying activities), and also includes notes about which activities are optional.

Accompanying each module are electronic training materials, including PowerPoint slides, activities and handouts, a reflection guide, and a feedback form. These materials are available in a downloadable folder for each module. Facilitators can provide printed or electronic copies of these materials to their training participants.

The Facilitator’s Guide uses two sets of icons so facilitators can quickly identify the audience and/or type of activity described in the Guide (Exhibit 2). One set (left) identify the stakeholders who are critical to partnership success; these icons match icons used in Partnering for Student Success. The other set (right) represent speakers, resources, tips, and activities used within the training modules.

DELIVERING THE TRAINING

Training facilitators delivering the Partnering for Student Success modules can be experienced trainers or professional development leaders, but do not need to be. They can be district or school staff; or they can be staff from partner organizations, municipal agencies, or any other entity involved in school-based partnerships. What's important is that facilitators understand and believe in the importance of taking intentional steps to establish and maintain successful partnerships. Any real-life experiences or examples with partnerships can be incorporated to enhance the trainings they deliver.

Once facilitators familiarize themselves and feel comfortable with Partnering for Student Success and the materials in this Guide, they should be equipped to deliver training, including adapting its content and materials to their local context and audiences. The trainings as outlined in this Guide offer a balance of presentation, discussion, and reflection activities. Their overall objective is to support participants' understanding of the roles and responsibilities that must be fulfilled to ensure systems and processes for partnership planning and management are established and maintained.

Facilitators who know their audience well should feel free to replace the modules' suggested activities and/or discussion questions with locally relevant activities or questions. If training participants work together or know one another well, facilitators can adapt the training materials to foster a community of practice amongst them. Gathering for trainings on multiple modules would allow participants to develop a rapport as a group over time. Facilitators can also encourage the use of technologies such as Google or Facebook to encourage participants to continue their collaboration beyond the training sessions.

Facilitators may decide to offer trainings for single-stakeholder groups (school-based staff only or partners only, for example) or mixed-stakeholder groups (school and partner staff combined, for example).

To foster the most comprehensive understanding of how to use Partnering for Student Success, participants should be encouraged to attend a training for each of the six elements featured in the toolkit and its strategies for building effective school-based partnerships. However, just as there are many different types of partnerships and partnership stakeholders, audiences will differ in their level of interest in receiving training. Not all audiences will need or be interested in receiving six separate training modules. Depending on their role within a school, district, or partner organization, some audiences may need to participate in only the introductory Overview module, whereas others will want to dive more deeply into the six individual training modules. Facilitators should consider their audience's needs when deciding which training module(s) to offer, and in which sequence.¹

GETTING STARTED

Before planning a training, facilitators are encouraged to review all materials contained in the Overview module. To determine the best starting place for trainings for their target audience, facilitators can use the Partnership Needs Assessment activity (see Appendix O of this Facilitator's Guide for its five role-based assessment forms).²

1. Attendees of training on the Overview module who then attend training on subsequent individual modules may find the content to be repetitious. To address this, facilitators can decrease the amount of time spent reviewing sub-elements within each training module and increase the amount of time spent on activities and discussions, which focus more on application of the suggested strategies within each element.
2. The Partnership Needs Assessment activity has two purposes: (1) to help facilitators decide where to begin to focus their training; and (2) to help attendees of training on the Overview module determine which sections of Partnering for Student Success they want to focus on, either in self-study or in future training. As appropriate, facilitators also can use the assessment activity with attendees of trainings that focus on Elements One through Six.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q: Who should use this Guide?

A: Anyone interested in providing support to strengthen school-based partnerships can use this Facilitator’s Guide to plan and develop training. Facilitators might include district or school staff, staff from organizations that partner with schools, or members of community-based agencies. The materials in this Guide were designed to be user-friendly for individuals with varying levels of experience with partnerships and/or with planning and delivering training.

Q: Who should be invited to participate in trainings on how to use Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships?

A: Any individual working in a school, district, partner organization, or community-based agency involved in school-based partnerships can attend trainings to learn about the strategies, tools, and resources included in Partnering for Student Success. Decide whether to offer trainings to single-stakeholder audiences (school staff only or partner staff only, for example) or to mixed-stakeholder audiences (school and partner staff combined, for example).

Q: What materials do I need for each training module?

A: Review the “Module Overview” and “Suggested Facilitation Process” sections of each training module in the Facilitator’s Guide. Each “Slide Overview & Talking Points” section offers a condensed version of that training’s PowerPoint slides and slide notes. The “Module Overview” section also briefly summarizes the materials and participant handouts needed for each training. For some activities, the Facilitator’s Guide provides links to video and other materials available online. If you do not have internet access in the training room, you are encouraged to download the videos and to print or otherwise provide participants with screenshots of web-based materials. Handouts can be shared with participants electronically if you are unable to provide printed copies.

Q: Do training participants need a copy of Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships?

A: It is helpful for participants to have their own copy of the toolkit for each training session they attend, but not necessary. (The training PowerPoints provide all the critical content.) If resources are scarce, consider asking participants to download the toolkit in advance onto their laptop or other mobile device (from <http://www.abtassociates.com/Reports/2016/Toolkit-Partnering-for-Student-Success-A-Practical.aspx>) or to bring their own printed copy. Another option is for you to provide copies of only those pages of the toolkit relevant to your particular training session.

Q: What do the icons in the “Slide Overview & Talking Points” section mean?

A. The icons tell you, for each PowerPoint slide, who is speaking and what type of activity is taking place. The same icons appear on the slides themselves, and a key is provided in Exhibit 2.

Q: Can I modify or replace materials in the training modules?

A: Yes! The training materials in each module are meant to serve as a guide as you plan and deliver the training. The PowerPoint slides and activity handouts in the Facilitator’s Guide are available in electronic formats that you can edit to meet your and your training participants’ needs. The suggested video clips, case studies, and role play discussions can easily be replaced with local examples of school-based partnerships.

Q: How much time do I need to deliver a training module?

A: The “Module Overview” of each training module lists an estimated amount of time to deliver its content and activities. Some modules are 60-75 minutes in length; others are 75-90 minutes. The “Slide Overview & Talking Points” section of each module also recommends timing for each slide and activity, listing some activities as “optional.” Use this information to adjust how much time you dedicate to each activity, as well as the total time needed for the training session. During training sessions, be flexible and respond to the questions and needs of your participants; you can adjust the amount of time spent on any activity depending on their levels of interest and engagement.

Q: Do the training modules need to be offered in a specific sequence?

A: You can deliver the training modules in any order you think is best, depending on the needs and goals of your participants. If participants have only enough time to attend one training session, deliver the Overview module. Then if they have more time later, you can deliver the remaining six modules in sequence, starting with Element One and ending with Element Six; or you and your participants can train next on the Element you think aligns best with current needs. The Partnership Needs Assessment activity (slide 18 in the Overview module) is a helpful tool to determine which training module is the best place to start with a particular group of stakeholders.

Q: What is the best way to prepare to deliver a training module?

A: When scheduling training sessions, build in enough preparation time so you feel confident and equipped to effectively deliver the training in a way that meets the session objectives (see slide 3 in the “Module Overview” section of each training module for its objectives). You should start by reviewing the Overview module to decide which training module(s) best meet your participants’ needs and in what sequence. Then familiarize yourself with the corresponding section(s) in Partnering for Student Success, as well as the content and materials in the Facilitator’s Guide for each module. At this time, you also must decide whether you are going to modify any of the materials to meet those needs and/or to fit the time available. Each “Module Overview” section lists the materials and participant handouts needed for that training session. You also can use the “Slide Overview & Talking Points” section to practice your delivery and flow of content.

Q: Is there anything I need to do after a training?

A: If you promised participants you would provide them with additional information or materials, make sure you take the time to provide them. At the end of the training session you should have had participants complete Feedback Forms. Review those now to determine whether participants have remaining needs you may be able to address, either through one-on-one follow-up or future trainings. These forms also can provide helpful feedback for you, as you reflect on your own facilitation style and what worked well—or did not work so well—during the training session.

Overview of Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships

Introduction

The purpose of this module is to provide a high-level overview of the Partnering for Student Success Guide. Participants will learn about the purpose, design, and uses of the Guide. At the end of this module, participants will complete a needs assessment to help them choose which Element(s) to focus on more closely in future training. This module will help Facilitators get familiar with all sections of the Guide before delivering any modules. The module is also appropriate for audiences who only have 75-90 minutes to learn about the Guide.

Schools are often willing to work with partners to fulfill these requirements, but they don't like to be surprised by last minute requests• In many cases, there are rules and laws prohibiting school staff from giving you student-level data, even if partners provide programming or services to individual students• In order to be successful, all stakeholders in a partnership should be clear about their needs. Consider questions like:<ul style="list-style-type: none">▪ What does the school expect or need from the partner organization?▪ Does the partner need space or school facilities to run their program?▪ Do you need help recruiting students to participate?▪ Does your program require support or assistance from teachers or other school staff to implement?• Remember what they say about the best laid plans. ... They don't always happen the way you would like them to• Therefore, partners need to maintain open communication with the school, and they need to remain flexible and responsive to evolving school needs

3. Session Objectives (Slide 3)

- Review session objectives
 - Ask if participants have questions

- Convey key points re: communicating the value of partnerships

5. Discuss Benefits and Goals/Vision of Partnerships (Slide 5)

- Use chart paper to record benefits of school-based partnerships
- Small-group discussion re: vision of partnerships

What are the pros and cons of sharing the raw Needs Assessment data with all partners during a meeting? What are the pros and cons of sharing the data prior to the meeting? <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Pro for during- School staff can observe initial partner reactions and discussions when they first see the data; staff can also answer questions about the data and how they were compiled • Con for during-Partners could be overwhelmed by being asked to make sense of the data in a short period of time (depending on meeting length and number of other agenda items) • Pro for prior to- Partners would have time to review the data and formulate specific questions; partners can come better prepared to discuss the area(s) they are most familiar with • Con for prior to- There is a risk partners will reach their own decisions about which needs are most important, making them less likely to engage in an open conversation with other partners 2. Based on the compiled needs assessment data, which areas of school need should be the highest priority? Which should be the lowest priority? What are some of the factors that should be considered when ranking priorities (e.g., how many areas can be selected given the school's current capacity)? <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Look at the average ranking to get a sense of which needs are more or less pressing, according to the teachers. • Is it reasonable to expect all of these needs could be met through partnerships? • Consider whether other stakeholders (school leaders, students, parents, partners) would rank needs in the same way. Should additional data be collected to see how others rank needs? • Think about how many needs a school could reasonably prioritize. What are some of the school conditions and/or capacities that should be factored into this discussion? 3. How should the meeting participants (school principal, partnership coordinator, and staff from partner organizations) begin to figure out which partners can help the school with its priority areas? <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. Is there additional information you would want from school leaders and staff? From current partner organizations? From organizations that are not currently partners? <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • What do partners currently do to help address these needs? • According to school leaders and staff, which partners are doing a good job meeting these needs? ELEMENT THREE

MODULE OVERVIEW

Element Three: Identify how partners “fit” to help meet school needs

Introduction

The purpose of this module is to introduce participants to Element Three, which focuses on how to identify how partners “fit” to help schools meet their needs. Participants will learn about the benefits of conducting partnership inventories, recruiting new partners to fill service gaps, and ensuring school and partner goals align. Participants will explore partnership inventory tools and engage in activities to identify how school-partner goals can best be articulated and aligned.

4  5 min.	 <h3 style="margin: 0;">3.1 - Conduct a partnership inventory to identify existing supports </h3> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Inventories should be conducted annually. • Inventories help schools and partners: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Map existing services and activities that align to goals; ▪ Document target audience, students served, key activities, and contact person for each organization; ▪ Identify unmet needs that could be filled by partners; and ▪ Review duplicative activities/services   Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships 41  	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Inventories help schools and partners understand gaps and overlaps in services • Schools should conduct a partnership inventory on an annual basis, and this should be done around the same time schools conduct their annual needs assessments. The inventory can serve as a way to map existing services and activities that could help schools meet their stated goals • Inventories can help schools document who is doing what in schools, including target population, students served, key activities, and contact information for staff working at partner organizations. This information is helpful both to schools and to other organizations partnering with the same school • Data from inventories can help stakeholders see where they have gaps in services, as well as where there might be overlap. Overlap might involve multiple partners offering the same services or perhaps serving only a small number of students with a variety of activities • School staff can lead inventory efforts, but school leaders play a key role in explaining why the inventory is valuable. Partners who are asked to provide information for inventories should take the time to provide this important information to school staff. And, they should proactively ask to see the results of the inventory   Consider asking “Have you ever conducted or contributed to a partnership inventory?”
5  5 min.	 <h3 style="margin: 0;">3.2 - Identify and recruit new partners to fill service gaps </h3> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • As needed, schools should search for partners to fill gaps in services. • Multiple stakeholders can offer insight about new partners to explore. Seek input from: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Existing partners ▪ District staff ▪ School staff ▪ Families   Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships 42  	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At times, schools may need to identify new partners • Once a school completes its partnership inventory– or as new priority needs arise– schools should look for partners who can help fill gaps in services. Schools should first look within existing partnerships • Schools and their designated partnership coordinator(s) should solicit suggestions from many individuals to help them identify new organizations to reach out to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Existing partners may offer the services sought, and they likely know of other partners who provide the services sought ▪ If districts store centrally located information about organizations that partner with schools, district staff may have information to share with schools ▪ School staff, parents, and students should also be invited to offer input on the selection of new partners

Slide #	Slide Image	Talking Points
6  5 min.	3.3 - Articulate and align school and partner goals  <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Schools should articulate their goals and their approach to meeting those goals • School and partner staff must talk about alignment between their individual goals • Assess partnership “fit” and develop common goals for the partnership • Package information about partner services Goals sometimes need to be re-aligned  <small>Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships 41</small>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • For all partnerships, it is important that all parties involved can identify how school and partner goals align • Schools should be able to explain their goals, as well as their approach for meeting those goals • Schools and partners should not assume their goals are aligned, and partners should be open to tweaking their goals to better meet school needs • Partner organizations need to be able to clearly articulate their vision, the services they offer, and the students with whom they work. This helps with assessing partnership “fit” <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Partners should also think strategically about how to help schools understand how their programs and services can help meet school goals. In other words, be clear about the value added by partnering with the organization ▪ Partners should aim to package information about their organization in a way that school staff will listen and can understand ▪ Framing partnerships as mutually beneficial (to the school community and the partner organization) can help people remember that partnerships can yield great results, but they need thoughtful attention and support ▪ Organizations can also be proactive to learn about what other partners are doing in a school building. Instead of waiting for a school to tell you how your work is similar, complementary, or duplicative of the work of another partner organization, get to know other partners and think about how your organizations can work together • Large organizations working in several schools may find it is helpful to meet with District and School staff to ensure the organization’s goals align with both those of the district and the schools they serve • As needed, schools and partners may need to revisit their needs and goals to make sure alignment still exists

ELEMENT FOUR

MODULE OVERVIEW

Element Four: Define expectations for implementing partner programs and activities

Introduction

The purpose of this module is to introduce participants to Element Four, which focuses on defining expectations for implementing partner programs and activities. Participants will learn about the benefits of defining programs, activities, and population served; of using data to set performance targets for partnerships; and identifying resources and supports needed for successful implementation. Participants will examine a case study and explore tools to document partnership agreements and goals.

4  4 min.	4.1 - Define programs, activities, and population served by each partner  <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Successful partnerships benefit from: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ clearly defined scope of work; ▪ jointly defined goals; ▪ target populations; and ▪ transparent timelines. • Multi-year partnerships may require annual review. • Proactively identify implementation challenges. <small>Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships 41</small>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Successful partnerships are fostered by clearly defined partnership logistics, such as who will be served, for what reason, by whom, and when • A clear timeline for program implementation or delivery is key • Partnerships that extend across multiple school years should revisit program scope and activities each year, and should ideally do this in the spring or summer prior to the next school year • Any potential challenges that could hinder implementation should be discussed before a program launches, and during implementation (as needed) • As part of defining the parameters of a partnership, all parties involved should agree how they will publicize and communicate partnership goals and planned activities
5  4 min.	4.2 - Use school- and student-level data to align and/or establish performance targets for each partnership  <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Select data-driven performance targets and timelines to meet them • Assess availability of data • Consider safeguards when sharing school- and student-level data <small>Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships 51</small>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • What sometimes gets overlooked in partnerships is the process of using data to set performance targets and to guide the implementation of specific programs • School- and student-level data are a useful source of information, and school and partner staff should work together to determine which data are currently collected by the school and its partners. With this information, they can jointly establish performance targets for individual partnerships or programs. And, they can develop feasible timelines for meeting the selected targets • If partners want to use student-level data, it often requires close collaboration with the school, as they have access to data that partners don't have access to • Partners should be up-front about any evaluation or reporting requirements they have for their funders. • Schools are often willing to work with partners to fulfill these requirements, but they don't like to be surprised by last minute requests • In many cases, there are rules and laws prohibiting school staff from giving you student-level data, even if partners work with individual students. It is important to be aware of – and adhere to – any regulations or safeguards regarding data sharing

3  3 min.	Session Objectives <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Participants will learn the importance of: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Intentional relationship building; ▪ Establishing expectations for communication between schools and partners and amongst partners; and ▪ Articulating the roles of partnership coordinators / points of contact • Participants will understand stakeholder roles and responsibilities to support Element Five • Participants will become familiar with Element Five resources in the Guide, including tools to set expectations for communication  <small>Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships 131</small>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Today we will focus on the need to be deliberate about creating opportunities to develop and nurture relationships within school-based partnerships. This element really makes the case for establishing clear lines of communication between all stakeholders • We will cover the importance of: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Intentional relationship building; ▪ Establishing expectations for communication between schools and partners; ▪ Articulating the roles and functions of partnership coordinators (or other staff who take on those roles); and ▪ Setting expectations for cross-partner communication and collaboration • You will also learn about the roles and responsibilities of various stakeholders involved in developing and nurturing relationships • During this session, you will also have a chance to explore the Element Five resources in the Guide, including tools to define and set expectations for communication between stakeholders involved in partnerships • Do you have any questions before we get started?
4  4 min.	5.1 – Provide opportunities for relationship building between partners and school stakeholders <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Intentional relationship building includes: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ informal, get-to-know-you conversations; ▪ opportunities to meet and collaborate; ▪ chances for partners to meet school community; and ▪ channels for promoting partnership successes. • School leaders should identify opportunities for partners to meet with school staff and community.  <small>Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships 141</small>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Partnerships require relationship building, trust, and rapport between parties. Clear, frequent communication between the school and its partners plays a critical role in both the implementation and success of school-based partnerships • There are several ways to be thoughtful and intentional about relationship building, including: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Making time for informal, get-to-know-you conversations to help stakeholders understand how each member of the partnership approaches their work, as well as what each member needs from others to be successful in their work ▪ School leaders need to make time for partners to meet and collaborate with school staff, especially if program implementation is dependent on staff involvement in planning or delivering program activities. Partners who deliver afterschool programs should make a point to connect with staff during the school day (if possible) ▪ Partner organizations should ask schools about opportunities to meet with school leaders and staff, students, families, and/or other partners. This might involve setting up informational tables in the school lobby or cafeteria or at PTA meetings and Back-to-School events ▪ Partners should make it a priority to attend the events and activities they are invited to, especially meetings with other partner organizations

		<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Partnership coordinators can facilitate engagement between the school community and partner organizations by inviting partners to contribute to meetings, school communications (such as newsletters, websites, or social media), and other ways to communicate partnership activities and successes   Ask participants to raise their hand if the schools they work in provide these types of opportunities

For example, who is the best point person for communication, and do they want to be contacted via phone, email, or in-person? • If partners require access to classroom teachers or other school staff, they should confirm whether it is acceptable to contact these staff directly • In addition to ongoing communication about partnership activities, schools and their partners should periodically discuss their levels of satisfaction with partnership implementation

6  4 min.	5.3 - Articulate the role of the partnership coordinator(s) and how stakeholders should work with them  <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Partnership coordinators can support partner communication and collaboration Coordination efforts are most successful when all parties understand the roles and responsibilities of the coordinator, including when and how to contact the coordinator for support  <small>Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships [6]</small>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Partnership coordinators serve an important role to help alleviate burden on school staff by assuming the responsibility for partner communication and collaboration. Whether formal or informal, most schools have one or more staff members who take on the responsibility of coordinating school-based partnerships School leaders can help build buy-in for partnership coordination efforts by clearly defining the roles and responsibilities of the coordinator. But, they must also go further by clearly articulating these roles to the coordinator, other school staff, partners, parents, and other community members To be effective, partnership coordinators must understand their role and how to work with school staff and partners. Similarly, partners should understand how and when to contact the partnership coordinator for support In the absence of a formal partnership coordinator, it is still a good idea for school staff and partner staff to be clear about who is responsible for coordinating logistics related to individual partnerships and their related programs and activities   If your participants are partnership coordinators, ask “Is your role clearly defined? 7  4 min.	5.4 - Set expectations for cross-partner communication and collaboration  <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Cross-partner communication and collaboration supports alignment and reduces duplication of efforts School leaders set the tone for collaboration by hosting regular partner meetings and encouraging all partners to attend Regular opportunities for collaboration should be available and well organized Partner information should be widely available  <small>Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships [7]</small>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Cross-partner communication and collaboration enable better-aligned partner activities, which can reduce duplication of effort and increase partners’ reach within the school School leaders and partnership coordinators can set the tone for collaboration by organizing and strongly encouraging partners to attend cross-partner meetings They can also help partners understand the benefits of collaborating with other partners– both within and beyond school-led partner meetings School staff, especially partnership coordinators, should establish the timeline for cross-partner collaboration, including frequency and modes of communication Monthly partner meetings are ideal, and they should be well organized and engaging so partners see the value of attending future meetings After completing or updating a school’s partnership inventory (See Element 3), the partnership coordinator should share information with all partners so they are aware of active partners, services offered, and contact information for each partner organization

Like other elements featured in the Guide, the activities within this element are meant to be tackled by partners and schools working in close collaboration. In fact, schools and partners should share responsibility for monitoring and measuring progress and outcomes of each partnership • Evaluating partnerships can facilitate progress monitoring, increase awareness of partnership activities, improve partner programs, and assist partnerships in meeting their goals • School leaders can set the tone about expectations for partners to collect and analyze data and to report on partnership and program outcomes. And, they should communicate these expectation • In this session, we will cover the importance of: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Identifying data to be collected and analyzed; ▪ Establishing processes for measuring progress against performance goals; and ▪ Reviewing and reflecting upon data to inform partnership and programming decisions • You will also learn about the roles and responsibilities of various stakeholders involved in discussions about partnership progress and future directions • During this session, you will also have a chance to explore the Element Six resources in the Guide, including tools to establish partnership outcomes and measure progress against indicators • Do you have any questions before we get started?

Small Group Discussion: Element Two Needs Assessment Activity

Logan Elementary School serves approximately 350 students in grades K-6. The school currently has partnerships with 14 external organizations, some of whom have been working with the school for 5+ years and some who joined more recently. In response to the growing number of partnerships, the principal added a half-time partnership coordinator position to her budget at the end of last year. At the start of the current school year, the partnership coordinator, a veteran teacher who now divides her time between serving as a reading specialist and overseeing partnership logistics, invited all teachers to complete the Whole School Needs Assessment for Teachers (see Partnering for Student Success: A Practical Guide to Building Effective School-Based Partnerships, Appendix 5). Twelve of the school's 19 teachers completed the assessment form, and the partnership coordinator compiled their responses (see Completed Needs Assessment Form for Element Two Activity).

After sharing the compiled needs assessment data with the principal, the principal requested a meeting with all 14 external organizations; staff from 10 of the 14 organizations attended the meeting. The principal opened the meeting by explaining, "The purpose of this meeting is to decide which areas to focus on during this school year, and to figure out which partners can help us in these areas."

In a small group, discuss the following questions:

1. What are the pros and cons of sharing the raw Needs Assessment data with all partners during a meeting? What are the pros and cons of sharing the data prior to the meeting?
2. Based on the compiled needs assessment data, which areas of school need should be the highest priority? Which should be the lowest priority? What are some of the factors that should be considered when ranking priorities (e.g., how many areas can be selected given the school's current capacity)?
3. How should the meeting participants (school principal, partnership coordinator, and staff from partner organizations) begin to figure out which partners can help the school with its priority areas?
 - a. Is there additional information you would want from school leaders and staff? From partner organizations? From organizations that are not currently partners?
4. What are some of the next steps the meeting participants could take after their initial review and discussion of the needs assessment data?

Case Study: Logan Elementary and After School Super Clubs

Scenario

Logan Elementary School (a K-6 school) is about to enter its second year of partnering with After School Super Clubs (ASSC), an afterschool program specializing in four clubs- debate, chess, science explorers, and drama—for students in grades 4-8. Prior to launching the afterschool clubs at Logan, the ASSC staff met with the school principal, guidance counselor, and partnership coordinator to assess school interest and need in formalizing a partnership. The school staff indicated students would be interested in participating in each of the four clubs, and agreed ASSC could use two classrooms to host the clubs from 3:10-5 pm each Monday-Thursday during the school year. The school also agreed to distribute an enrollment flyer created by ASSC, which was sent to families via “backpack mail.” The partnership coordinator agreed to serve as the point of contact for ASSC staff, and he mentioned he would let partner staff know about opportunities to meet members of the school community (including parents and other partner organizations).

Despite ASSC’s goal of serving 75 students in the first year at Logan, a total of 57 students participated in the clubs. The science explorers club was disbanded after spring break due to low student enrollment, but the other clubs operated from late-September to early-June. Student attendance was not consistent, and fewer than half of enrolled students were still participating by mid-May. Those students who did participate consistently provided positive feedback on clubs via a satisfaction survey administered by the club leaders. Anecdotally, club leaders heard from teachers that some activities carried over into students’ work in the classroom, while parents reported their students enjoyed the extracurricular activities.

During the first year, ASSC staff were able to access their designated classroom spaces at 3:10 pm, but the school janitor routinely disrupted club activities by starting to clean the classrooms at 4:40 pm each day. ASSC staff spoke to the school principal about the disruptions, and she told them the partnership coordinator would look into the problem. Although he did not follow-up on the janitor’s classroom cleaning schedule, Logan’s partnership coordinator was periodically in touch with ASSC. He emailed two schoolwide newsletters during the school year and invited ASSC to attend one all-partner meeting in March. The meeting was convened after another afterschool partner complained ASSC was offering similar activities as those offered by their organization. During the all-partner meeting, it became clear the two partner organizations were offering different activities, but that both were suffering from declining enrollment and attendance.

Discussion

At the start of their second year partnering with Logan, ASSC staff requested a meeting with the school principal and partnership coordinator to discuss program activities for the upcoming school year. Prior to the meeting, the partnership coordinator emailed a summary of needs assessment data collected from 12 of Logan’s teachers (See Handout for Element Two Needs Assessment Activity) and asked ASSC staff to review it prior to the meeting.

1. What were the key successes and challenges of ASSC’s first year at Logan?
2. If you were the principal, what are some of the key topics you would like to address with ASSC at this meeting? What requests would you make of ASSC for year two?
3. If you were the partnership coordinator, what are some of the key topics you would like to address with ASSC at this meeting? What requests would you make of ASSC for year two?
4. If you were a member of the ASSC team, what are some of the key topics you would like to address with school staff at this meeting? What requests would you make of the school for year two?
5. How could these stakeholders use the needs assessment data to guide the conversation about ASSC’s programming in year two?

Role Play Discussion: Cross-Partner Communication and Collaboration

Instructions

Break into groups of 5. Each person will assume one of the following roles in a discussion:

- School Principal
- Partnership Coordinator
- School Counselor
- College Ready! Representative
- Project Impact Representative

Independently, spend 3-4 minutes reading the “Background” and “Meet the Role Play Participants” sections.

Spend 3-4 minutes using the “Playing Card” for your assigned role to prepare for the meeting. Take notes about any key points you would like to make during the role play discussion.

As a small group, spend 10 minutes conducting the role play discussion.

Background

For the 2018-2019 academic year, West Valley School District has set a goal for 100% of students to graduate ready for college or career. The school principal and partnerships coordinator at West Valley High School is convening two of their current partners—College Ready!, a college preparation partner and Project Impact, a tutoring/mentoring program for high school students to discuss their services. Over the course of the last school year, several teachers mentioned in passing to the partnership coordinator that they were confused about which program they should refer students to. During planning for the upcoming school year, the partnerships coordinator mentioned this issue to the school principal and they agreed that a conversation was needed with the two partners to discuss each partner’s services and how to better leverage what each partner is doing, while also eliminating duplication of efforts.

Meet the Role Play Participants

- College Ready! is a local college preparation partner that focuses on whole class SAT/ACT test preparation and financial aid attainment (FAFSA, scholarships, grants). It began its partnership with West Valley High School last year. As a relatively new organization, College Ready!’s mission has transformed over the course of the last two years based on the needs within their school partners. Their original mission was focused on test preparation and financial aid; however, in the last year, they noticed that many of the students in their test preparation class were struggling with basic skills so toward the end of the year, they started to allocate more staff to the school in order to hold small-group tutoring during their test preparation classes. Additionally, they began to assist students with college applications. Over the summer, they have expanded their staffing to maintain the new services and position the organization to continue to evolve.
- Project Impact is a one-on-one mentoring program for high school students to help students build their academic skills and navigate the college application process. Project Impact is an established program with over 10 years of experience working with high schools in a number of cities. The organization has been a presence at West Valley High School for five years. Project Impact mentors are committed to the student throughout their four years in high school and often continue to mentor the student through college. Last year, by talking with school staff, they noted an increased need for more support and have ramped up their recruitment and training of mentors over the summer in order to meet the increased demand in the upcoming school year. Project Impact is excited to expand its presence in the school and pair more students with mentors.
- School Principal. The school principal has heard rumblings that teachers are confused about the role of the two partners. Many of the new teachers have been referring their students to College Ready! while the veteran teachers continue to refer their students to Project Impact. The principal would like for the partners to work together and not duplicate efforts in hopes of eliminating confusion and maximizing impact to achieve the District's goal of 100% of students being college and career ready. The school principal has agreed to sit in on the initial meeting with the partnership coordinator and kickoff the discussion.

- Partnership Coordinator. The partnership coordinator has been at the school for two years. While not new to the job, s/he is still working on establishing better relationships with the existing partners and building new relationships with potential partners. West Valley High School is partnered with over 20 organizations and this is one of several conversations s/he will be holding in the month of August. Because College Ready! began its small-group tutoring classes during the last three months of school, the partnership coordinator was not aware of this until teachers mentioned this in passing. At that point, s/he decided to deal with this issue over the summer before the start of the next school year.
- School Counselor. The school counselor holds periodic whole class meetings with students at West Valley High School starting in their freshman year. Then during their junior year, students begin meeting with the school counselor at least once every two months. The school counselor has data collected on where each student is interested in applying to college, foundations/organizations that have previously awarded scholarships to West Valley High School students, and student FAFSA completion. Throughout the year, the school counselor also offers workshops before, during, and after school on the college application process. These are attended by the first 20 students that sign up for the workshop.

Playing Cards

Each member of the role play discussion has a separate "Playing Card" that describes their role and disposition or attitude during the role play. "Playing Cards" can be found on the pages that follow.

School Principal Playing Card

- Role: Kickoff the discussion
 - Discuss the purpose the meeting.
 - Introduce the District's goal for 100% of students to be college and career ready and how the school plans to achieve the goal.
 - Turn conversation over to the partnership coordinator.

- Disposition or Attitude (CHOOSE ONE)
 - Hands-off. The principal would like for the partners to work together and not duplicate efforts, but is busy with running the school and does not have time to get involved in the details or logistics of how this happens. The school principal has agreed to sit in on the initial meeting with the partnership coordinator and kickoff the discussion, but has told the partnership coordinator that s/he will be mostly hands-off.
 - Hands-on. The principal would like for the partners to work together and not duplicate efforts. S/he is actively involved in all activities that directly relate to meeting the District's goal for 100% of students to be college and career ready.

School Counselor Playing Card

- Role: Participate in the discussion
 - The school counselor is concerned about duplication of effort since s/he offers workshops focused on the college application process throughout the year.
 - The school counselor can provide data about students to the partners (e.g., where students are thinking about applying for college and FAFSA completion data).
 - The school counselor wants to help teachers understand which program(s) to refer their students to.

Partnership Coordinator Playing Card

- Role: Facilitate the discussion
 - School principal will kick off the discussion.
 - The partnership coordinator will facilitate the discussion.
 - Have the partners introduce themselves, their history and mission and goals.
 - Ask partners to describe their services and what they hope to provide at West Valley High School this year.
 - Guide the conversation to identifying overlaps services and the potential to collaborate to avoid duplication of services.
 - Ask partners if there are any other partners who may cover gaps that we have identified in our services (e.g., programs that organize college visitations).
 - Discuss the details and logistics of the agreed upon collaboration, including adjusted roles and responsibilities, regular meetings to monitor progress, points of contact, and modes of communication.

Partner Playing Card

- Role: Participate in the discussion
- Disposition or Attitude (CHOOSE ONE)
 - Agreeable to collaboration. You understand the school's goal to better utilize its partners and are supportive in working with the partner and school to determine how to maximize impact without duplicating efforts.
 - Disagreeable to collaboration. Your organization has worked extremely hard raising funds and training staff and volunteers to build up its capacity to increase services at West Valley High School this upcoming year. The expansion plan was discussed with the partnership coordinator at the end of last year and the partnership coordinator did not give any indication that there would need to be any changes to the plan. To maintain its reputation, especially with its donors and volunteers, it is important that your staff expands its program as planned so that the resources are utilized in a capacity that is similar to its original intention.

Case Study: Assessing Progress of the Afterschool Literacy Coalition

Scenario

The Afterschool Literacy Coalition (ALC) provides training, coaching, and materials to afterschool programs so they can provide literacy supports to participants in their programs. ALC has served schools and community based programs within the Walton School District for nearly 10 years. Three years ago, Walton's Superintendent released a strategic plan that includes a goal to ensure all students are reading on grade level by the time they enter 4th grade. Since then, a growing number of schools have sought support from ALC.

For two years, ALC has delivered training, coaching, and materials (including interactive read aloud guides, literacy games, and leveled books for the afterschool program's community library) to three afterschool programs at Mitchell Elementary School, a K-5 school in the Walton School District. Staff from each program attended ALC's training on how to incorporate literacy activities and supports into afterschool programming, and each program received ~100 leveled books for their program libraries. Staff from one of the afterschool programs struggled to regularly attend trainings and participate in coaching sessions, but they continued to implement the program on a regular basis.

At the beginning of the school year, the school struggled to schedule an opportunity for ALC to deliver a brief presentation to teachers introducing them to ALC's supports and to explain how they could refer students to programs offering literacy supports. This presentation was delivered to several other schools during professional development sessions, and ALC believes targeted recruitment and referral ensured that students who could benefit the most from participating were able to enroll. As a result, the afterschool programs at Mitchell did not receive referrals from teachers and enrolled using their normal methods of reaching out at back-to-school nights and other parent events.

Walton's Superintendent recently instructed all schools to develop an action plan that specifies strategies for meeting the goals in the district's strategic plan, including which partner(s) and partnership(s) will help them meet these goals. In turn, the principal for Mitchell invited ALC to a meeting to discuss the academic performance of students participating in afterschool programs that have received training, coaching, and support from ALC. At the meeting, ALC shared the following data with Mitchell's principal, Literacy Coach, and the school guidance counselor, who is informally responsible for coordinating school partnerships:

- All participating students from Mitchell increased their Fountas & Pinnell reading levels from the beginning to the end of the school year, and 65% of students increased by two or more levels.
- On average, students recorded 14 minutes of independent reading per afternoon throughout the school year.
- Even though ALC tries to focus on serving students that are reading at one or two levels below grade level, 70% of participating students began the program at or above grade level.
- Approximately 75% of students attended their afterschool program for at least 85% of program days, while 12% attended 70-84% of program days, 8% attended 50-69% of program days, and 5% attended fewer than 50% of program days.
- Students participating in the program with staff who regularly participated in training and coaching sessions exhibited greater reading level gains, recorded more minutes of independent reading, and had higher program attendance rates than students in the program that did not participate as regularly in training or coaching sessions.

Discussion

1. Based on the data shared by ALC, which aspects of its literacy training and coaching appeared to be successful?
2. What additional data should the Mitchell and ALC staff examine to understand the impacts of ALC's initiative?
3. What, if any, changes would you suggest to ALC's program design or implementation in the upcoming year?
4. What would you recommend these stakeholders do in the future to assess partnership progress, outcomes, and next steps?
